Framing and Overview of the Workshop

The USAID Policy LINK¹ Project implemented by DAI Global, LLC has a global mandate to promote resilience and strengthen agriculture policy systems and institutions. In South Sudan, Policy LINK promotes collaborative governance, facilitative leadership, evidence-based decision-making, and the convergence of community and donor resources in the USAID Resilience Focus Zone (RFZ) areas of Akobo, Budi, Jur River, Kapoeta North, and Wau Counties.

Between August 2021 and June 2022, Policy LINK conducted a series of activities designed to build community-led resilience in Jur River County.² The activities included a community mapping exercise, sense-making workshops at the payam and county levels, bottom-up local action planning workshops, and a joint work planning workshop with community delegates and USAID implementing partners (IPs) active in the county.

Through the workshops, stakeholders developed a coherent county action plan for Jur River and an initial joint work plan that can guide the work of USAID IPs, communities, and local government. These flexible documents can be enhanced and expanded, as needed, to achieve the aspirations of community-led resilience.

Between June 14-15, 2022, community delegates, local and state government officials, and USAID IPs developed a joint county-level feedback strategy. The strategy will guide delegates as they raise awareness of and build support for community-led resilience plans among Jur River residents. This report describes the June 2022 workshop as well as the key messages developed and the platforms for disseminating those messages.

Participation

This community feedback strategy workshop was attended by the same delegates (selected by the community) who participated in the county-level action planning and joint work planning workshops convened by Policy LINK in Jur River County. Six delegates and one representative from the payam community development committee (CDC) represented each of the six payams, for a total of 42 delegates. In addition, Policy LINK invited all the County Departmental Directors and the County Commissioner as well as the previous delegates from the state line ministries, directorates, and commissions (e.g., from the ministries of agriculture, gender, child and social welfare, animal resources, tourism, cooperatives and rural development, and local government); members of law enforcement and police commissioners; the Commissioner of the Relief and Rehabilitation Commission (RRC); the National Bureau of Statistics Commissioner; and the directorate of the fire brigade.

² Policy LINK also completed joint work planning in Wau County and stakeholder engagement and rapid community resilience mapping using focus group discussions in all payams of Akobo, Budi, and Kapoeta North counties.

USAID Implementing Partner Participation

Five USAID IPs attended the community feedback strategy workshop: (1) DT Global (Shejeh Salam project), (2) the Agency for Technical Cooperation and Development (ACTED), (3) the Danish Refugee Council (DRC), (4) DAI (Resilience Through Agriculture in South Sudan project or RASS), and (5) Integrity Global (Monitoring, Evaluation, and Learning Support or MELS program). The total number of IP participants was 12.

Methodology

To encourage active participation, Policy LINK used the following methodology:

Framing

At the beginning of each workshop session, the facilitator framed the session's objectives to prepare participants for active, insightful deliberations in group discussions and question-and-answer sessions.

Thematic Group Presentations

This session provided a platform for each thematic (shock) and constituency (payam, county, and state delegates) group to develop key messages and outreach strategies. Groups presented their plans at the plenary session for refinement and endorsement by other participants.

Feedback Group Simulation Practice

During this session, each group selected community feedback presenters to convey the agreed-upon messages. The presenters practiced delivering key messages, while other session participants acted as forum representatives and offered feedback.

Workshop Objectives

Overall Objective

- To continue building momentum toward effective collaboration between the citizens of Jur River County and USAID IPs by helping communities understand community-led resilience.

Sub-Objectives

- Develop simple, easy-to-understand thematic messages that can be effectively delivered through existing community forums.
- Identify existing community forums through which to deliver key messages.

Workshop Format and Outputs

Framing the Workshop

After welcoming the participants, Policy LINK invited Pastor Joseph Lual to open the workshop with a prayer. Then, the facilitator introduced the workshop objective: to collaboratively develop key messages on community-led resilience and a strategy and plan for sharing those messages with Jur River residents who were unable to participate in previous workshops.

Opening Remarks

The Director General of the Ministry of Local Government opened the workshop on behalf of the Minister of Local Government and Law Enforcement, Honorable Ibrahim Surur Ibrahim. He then welcomed the delegates, encouraging them to be attentive and active during the workshop for the benefit of the communities they were representing.

Day 1

Over four sessions, six mixed groups of community delegates, CDC representatives, county officials, state line ministry delegates, and USAID IPs discussed resilience concepts and developed key messages. Points of discussion included defining resilience and community-led resilience, shifting mindsets, envisioning a better future, and fostering community ownership, responsibility, and resource commitments. The delegates carefully considered each topic, then proposed messages around each thematic area. Each group then presented the messages to the plenary session for critique and endorsement.

Day 2

Sessions on the second day focused on developing key messages on the most impactful shocks and stressors (see Table 1 for a summary). Payam delegates were grouped by payam; IPs, county officials, and state line representatives had their own groups. Together, participants identified existing forums through which to convey the key messages. Finally, the groups selected a few representatives to practice how messages could be delivered effectively.

Community-led Resilience I. What does resilience mean? <ul style="list-style-type: none"> Resilience means not giving up in the face of difficulties. It means persistence and determination. Resilience means preparedness and being equipped to withstand any shock. For example, someone with goats, a job, and food items will withstand shocks better than someone without those assets (or with fewer assets). Resilience means being able to find alternative means of dealing with unexpected shocks and stressors at the individual and household levels. Resilience means the ability of an individual to draw on internal and external resources to overcome shocks and stressors facing him/her and his/her household. 2. <ul style="list-style-type: none"> Community-led resilience is when community leaders take responsibility for leading people as they address common problems. Community-led resilience means unity and commitment among community members in the face of shocks. Unity and commitment are key to enabling collaboration and partnership. Community-led resilience is community preparedness and response to existing hazards and stressors in the environment. Community-led resilience is when people join ideas to explore means and ways to strengthen their resilience capacities. Community resilience actions like growing trees can improve the environment and help reduce shocks that come from climate change-related factors. Community-led resilience means the ways through which the community mitigates shocks and stressors using the existing indicators to plan for future shocks. Envisioning a Better Future 5. Why is it important for individuals, households, and communities to have a vision despite the shocks or challenges? <ul style="list-style-type: none"> It helps the community achieve the goal of being resilient and having resilient households. It sets a pathway to fight future shocks, e.g., producing excess food during a year when there is more rain can create more food reserves that the individual, households, and the community can use in times of scarcity. It uplifts the hopes of the community and individuals that they can overcome challenges and shocks. A clear vision can help the community set the roadmap for its resilience process. <ul style="list-style-type: none"> Reviewed shocks and stresses and ranked them by impact. Identified and ranked payam shock- responsive priority actions. Identified local resources at the payam level and garnered resource commitments from community representatives. Selected five community representatives for each payam to represent the payam in the county-level planning. At the county level, reviewed the Payam Local Action Plan in Wau in February 2022. Reached consensus on the Wau County resilience priority actions. Developed the Wau County Resilience Action Plan (done by 25 representatives of communities, governments, and IPs in Wau in February 2022). Convened a dialogue between 25 community representatives, local and state government, and USAID IPs through joint work planning in March 2022 in Wau. 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> Schools Fishing Groups Cattle Camp Youth Groups Women's Meetings 	Wet Season Once a month Once a month	180 40 0	150 43 33	6. Key Challenges

- The short duration of the workshop did not allow for extensive deliberations or give delegates enough time to practice disseminating messages to communities.
- Translating sessions into multiple languages took up significant time and resulted in the practice session being cut short.
